Daily Practice
Try doing this activity with your child to help reinforce what they’ve learned:

- Before your child starts a challenging task during the day, have them practice deep, centered breathing. Have them close their eyes and say two positive self-talk statements silently. Practice this with your child.

What Is My Child Learning?
Managing anxiety effectively makes it easier to focus and succeed in social and academic situations. Your child will be able to identify social situations that can cause anxiety, and apply what they’ve learned about calming down when they face social anxiety.

Why Is This Important?
Academic and social situations can cause anxiety in many children. Children who can’t manage anxiety have difficulty focusing and working in school, and they can be at risk for emotional and behavioral problems.

When your child is overwhelmed by anxiety, their ability to handle stress is affected. This can make it difficult for them to handle other challenges. Being able to manage anxiety using Ways to Calm Down, which include positive self-talk, can help your child achieve more personal, social, and school success.
